This summer we celebrate the significant role Black artists have played in the Bay Area with special exhibitions, performances, films, and collection displays. The Bay Area has launched or been home to some of the country's most important Black artists for decades. Moving to Oakland from New Orleans, renowned satirical painter Robert Colescott studied fine art at UC Berkeley in the 1940s. Romare Bearden was invited to Berkeley in 1972 to create a mural for City Council Chambers. His quartet of diverse faces has become the iconic logo for the city of Berkeley. I was thrilled to hear about a school group from Rosa Parks Elementary that was inspired by Bearden's study for the mural during a Celebrating Black Artists at BAMPFA tour and made their own collage (pictured above).

Both of these artists’ works, and many more, can be seen in the current exhibition What Has Been and What Could Be (closing July 7), which has two thematic sections that highlight the influential work of Black artists in the region. In “East Bay Ways,” local artists such as Sadie Barnette, Dewey Crumpler, Mike Henderson, Mildred Howard, David Huffman, and Raymond Saunders are highlighted. In another gallery, we show all of the works by Black artists that were acquired during a special moment in BAMPFA's history from 1971 to 1973, thanks to a modest National Endowment for the Arts grant, including now-famous works by Barbara Chase-Riboud, Bettye Saar, and Charles White.

Our main exhibition this summer and fall is A Movement in Every Direction: Legacies of the Great Migration—a celebrated exhibition of contemporary art inspired by the historical legacy of the Great Migration, a mass movement of more than six million Black Americans throughout the twentieth century. A Movement in Every Direction spotlights an intergenerational cohort of twelve Black artists, many of whose family histories have been profoundly shaped by this legacy.

Complementing these important exhibitions, BAMPFA's film program advances our commitment to presenting work by Black filmmakers this summer with a screening on June 13 of Julie Dash’s Daughters of the Dust. Upon its initial release in 1991, this award-winning film became the first feature film directed by a Black American woman to receive theatrical distribution in the United States. Defying this representational dearth, an exciting new wave of Black female filmmakers have recently followed in Dash's footsteps— including Raven Jackson, whose celebrated 2023 feature All Dirt Roads Taste of Salt (screening at BAMPFA on June 19) was produced by Oscar winner and recent BAMPFA guest Barry Jenkins.

One program I am especially excited about this summer is a live performance by Brontez Purnell, a nationally acclaimed artist, musician, and writer. We are excited to welcome Purnell on August 16 to perform songs by his uncle J. J. Malone, a blues musician who migrated from Alabama to Oakland in the 1960s. Moments like these are a reminder of how Black artists of the past and present continue to enrich the cultural life of the Bay Area.

We celebrate this legacy at BAMPFA, and we hope you will join us to experience it firsthand.

To Exalt the Ephemeral: The (Im)permanent Collection draws from BAMPFA’s art and film collections to explore how museums collect, care for, and amplify the work of artists who celebrate ideas of impermanence and cycles of decay and regeneration. The exhibition is inspired by the rich history of experimentation, performance, and non-object-based artistic practices in BAMPFA’s exhibition program, as well as the many conceptual projects, scores, ephemera, and works with alternative art making materials and techniques in the museum’s collections. The exhibition explores how institutions can embrace the work of artists who not only acknowledge, but also exalt the inevitability of impermanence, creating artworks with organic and non-archival materials and without the intention for them to last forever. To Exalt the Ephemeral provides an opportunity to showcase key histories and works in the collection by artists across generations and disciplines, including Nayland Blake, James Lee Byars, Theresa Hak Kyung Cha, Sarah Charlesworth, Bruce Conner, Imogen Cunningham, Tacita Dean, Felix Gonzalez-Torres, Hans Haacke, Eva Hesse, Ando Hiroshi, Sister Corita Kent, Paul Kos, Zoe Leonard, Chiura Obata, Silke Otto-Knapp, Estefania Puerta, Rosie Lee Tompkins, Cecilia Vicuña, Andy Warhol, Martin Wong, and many others.

ART WALL

ROSE D’AMATO: MISSION CHEVROLET

AUGUST 7–DECEMBER 15  NEW EXHIBITION

Rose D’Amato (b. 1991, Whittier, California) is a second-generation sign painter and pinstriper. Her abstract compositions celebrate this personal lineage as a representation of the ingenuity of Latinx and working-class communities and the traditions of self-presentation embodied in lowrider culture. For her first museum exhibition, she created an Art Wall commission based on the recently exposed Mission Chevrolet Service billboard—a historic hand-painted sign in San Francisco—to memorialize and celebrate this formerly hidden emblem of community and artistic labor. D’Amato reframes the sign’s design through the techniques of its creation, as well as the service it advertises, to question the boundary between the hand- and machine-made, while establishing an art history that is inclusive of the care, knowledge, and creativity inherent to the manual labor that fuels our world.

Art Wall / Rose D’Amato: Mission Chevrolet is curated by Claire Frost, Art Program Senior Project Manager, Stanford Health Care (former BAMPFA Curatorial Associate).

The Art Wall is made possible by major funding from Frances Hellman and Warren Breslau.

WED / 8.7.24 / 5:00 PM
San Francisco–based artist Rose D’Amato addresses her newly commissioned Art Wall with Claire Frost, former BAMPFA Curatorial Associate.

MATRIX 285

YOUNG JOON KWAK: RESISTANCE PLEASURE

AUGUST 7–DECEMBER 8  NEW EXHIBITION

Young Joon Kwak (b. 1984, Queens, New York) works across sculpture, performance, and video, moving between formal abstraction and bodily figuration to create works that resist the boundaries of representation. MATRIX 285 / Young Joon Kwak: Resistance Pleasure presents a newly commissioned installation by the Los Angeles–based artist. Using a mixture of resin, metal, and other synthetic and organic materials, Kwak casts the human form—their own and those of friends and collaborators. In these sculptures, the body is fragmented and installed throughout the gallery to suggest a series of movements or gestures within the space. With their distinctive materials and surfaces, Kwak’s sculptures draw attention to the details and postures of the body even as they render it in new ways. These transformations and disorientations of the figure invite close and careful acts of looking. Kwak’s sculptures demonstrate the complex ways that we see and recognize one another and prompt an imagining of new ways of being and belonging.

MATRIX 285 / Young Joon Kwak: Resistance Pleasure is curated by Anthony Graham, Senior Curator.

The exhibition is part of BAMPFA’s ongoing MATRIX series of contemporary art exhibitions. Founded in 1978, MATRIX provides artists with an experimental platform to make and show new work. The MATRIX program is made possible by a generous endowment gift from Phyllis C. Wattis.

WED / 8.7.24 / 6:00 PM
Los Angeles–based artist Young Joon Kwak talks about their new sculptural installation, commissioned for MATRIX 285 / Young Joon Kwak: Resistance Pleasure, with Anthony Graham, Senior Curator.

Screening and Conversation:
Akea Brionne & Jamea Richmond-Edwards
SAT / 6.15.24 / 1:30 PM

In conjunction with A Movement in Every Direction: Legacies of the Great Migration, BAMPFA presents a screening of films by Akea Brionne and Jamea Richmond-Edwards. Both featured in the show, the artists made these works as part of their commission for A Movement in Every Direction. In Mississippi Goddamn, Brionne uses documentary filmmaking to consider her family connection to Columbus, Mississippi—the place where her grandfather was born and raised. Through music and dance, Richmond-Edwards’s film Leviathan considers the migration story of the artist’s family. In both works, the artists reflect on personal and familial narratives within the larger historical context of the Great Migration.

Performance

Brontez Purnell
FRI / 8.16.24 / 7:30 PM

Programmed by Sean Carson

Brontez Purnell and his six-piece band perform songs by his uncle J. J. Malone, a blues musician who migrated to Oakland from Alabama in the 1960s.

Advance tickets are recommended.

CURATOR’S TOUR

Matthew Villar Miranda
SUN / 6.23.24 / 3:00 PM

Curatorial Associate Matthew Villar Miranda leads a tour inspired by the concept of “histories from below,” which was engaged and reinvented by historians, philosophers, and theorists across the last century. From Nancy Grossman’s leather-bound bust to Stephanie Syjuco’s museological parody, the tour explores how artists from the historical margins reveal vital knowledge from often-overlooked and unexpected perspectives.

PERFORMANCE

Zero Charisma
SAT / 6.15.24 / 5:00 PM
Join us for a performance by Oakland-based sound artist Zero Charisma. Fueled by her origin story as a queer, Black, and Indigenous Afrofuturist, Zero Charisma’s ethereal music envelops listeners in a dreamlike state, exploring stories of our spiritual realities. As her voice layers and loops around itself to form haunting choruses, Zero Charisma builds a powerful current of song, creating a lyrical tapestry accentuated at times with the pulse of synths and beats.

Included with gallery admission.

INTRO TO RISOGRAPH WORKSHOP WITH ALAYNA TINNEY
SUN / 7.7.24 / 1:00 PM
Join local artist and Art Lab facilitator Alayna Tinney for a beginner-friendly dive into risograph printing. Tinney is joined by a special guest printmaker, who will feature their work and ideas as inspiration. You will create a multimedia drawing or collage and turn it into a one-color risograph print using the machine’s manual printing option. Make something in one session, or start something you can work on and add to in future sessions. All experience levels and ages are welcome.

Space is limited; RSVP required.

PAPERMAKING WITH JULIA GOODMAN
SUN / 7.28.24 / 1:00 PM
Local artist Julia Goodman shares a step-by-step process to make unique pieces of handmade paper. Participants learn to use deckle boxes, colored recycled paper, kitchen blenders, and water to make their own paper. We discuss paper weight, fiber quality, and color mixing.

This workshop is open to students of all ages and experience levels.

Space is limited; RSVP required.

EXPRESSION THE SELF IN COMICS WITH YASMEEN ABEFIFARD
SAT / 8.17.24 / 1:00 PM
This workshop encourages those unfamiliar with comics to dip their feet into character building and expressing themselves through the medium of comics. Iranian American artist Yasmeen Abedifard guides participants to identify an emotion that can be materialized and expressed through a character outside of their own experience. No extensive artistic or creative skill needed—just a strong desire to express yourself.

Space is limited; RSVP required.

FREE FIRST THURSDAYS
The galleries are free for all on the first Thursday of each month.

Art Lab is open!
Enjoy hands-on art making in the Art Lab, and check the website for special guided tours.

SECOND SATURDAYS FOR FAMILIES

In BAMPFA’s galleries, Art Lab, and Reading Room

Admission is always free for kids 18 and under and for one adult per child 13 and under. Children must be accompanied by at least one adult at these family programs.

GALLERY + STUDIO

For ages 6–12 with accompanying adult(s)

Each of these two-part workshops integrates an interactive gallery tour with a related art project; each session lasts about an hour and a half. Sign up in the Art Lab ten minutes ahead of the session, in time to join us for the tour that starts at 11:30.

Tikar-Inspired Mat Making
SAT / 6.8.24
11:30 AM–1:00 PM
Workshop led by Tara Ani Baghdassarian
Borneo-based Malaysian artist Yee I-Lann uses the traditional tikar, or woven mat, to tell a collaborative story of the colonization of her native land and culture. Working with the artist, girls and women in her community wove numerous tikar to express cultural resilience and to consider the climate crisis. After an interactive tour of Yee I-Lann’s Art Wall, TIKAR/MEJA/PLASTIK, weave a personalized table mat using paper and mixed-media materials to tell a story of your origins.

We Go: Ancestors Go Where the Indigo Flow
SAT / 7.13.24
11:30 AM–1:00 PM
Workshop led by Janaé “Jaee” Sumter
In A Movement in Every Direction: Legacies of the Great Migration, twelve contemporary artists consider what the Great Migration means to them personally and culturally. After seeing some of these artists’ works, build a personal archival tapestry using photographs, prints, sketches, and a range of found materials collaged and appliquéd onto indigo-dyed canvas. Tell your story while unpacking the migratory history of indigo as a plant and an ancestral bridge. Families are encouraged to bring copies of family photos and other personally meaningful images to use as elements in their artwork. General images from historians and artists related to the Great Migration are also provided.

My Father’s Dragon
by Ruth Stiles Gannett
SAT / 6.8.24
2:00–3:00 PM
Reading led by Linda Artel, former BAMPFA children’s film festival programmer
Intergenerational narration frames this Newbery Honor–winning classic, in which Elmer Elevator runs away with a savvy alley cat to rescue a flying baby dragon. The unfortunate dragon is being exploited as a ferry service by the selfish animals of Wild Island. Elmer stows away on a ship bound for the island with a knapsack full of tricks—chewing gum, rubber bands, a fine-toothed comb, and other unexpected things. With these tools and his own sharp wits, Elmer disarms the fiercest beasts on the island.

Olga and the Smelly Thing from Nowhere
by Elise Gravel
SAT / 7.13.24
2:00–3:00 PM
Reading led by Vickie Price, librarian, West Contra Costa Unified School District
When Olga encounters and discovers the truly weird species olgamus ridiculus she is ecstatic. What does an olgamus eat? How does it poop? Why does it make such strange noises? With her trusty observation notebook and the help of a librarian, a shopkeeper, and some friends, Olga sets out to learn all the facts about her smelly, almost-furry discovery and searches for him when he goes missing. The scientific method is the best way to discover anything!

Education programs at BAMPFA are made possible by generous support from the Koret Foundation.
The American independent filmmaker Les Blank (1935–2013) was based in Berkeley for the majority of his professional career. An important figure in the Bay Area film community, Blank was also a devoted audience member at BAMPFA from the late 1960s, when he was a young filmmaker, to the end of his life.

His sensitive eye as a cinematographer is at the heart of his filmmaking, and it is this talent that allowed him the ability to capture the essence of people, activities, and landscapes as a poet-filmmaker. He trusted his instincts and emotional response to the moment and made exceptionally perceptive films. His body of work as a filmmaker represents an extremely important perspective on American regional cultures.

Blank’s achievements as a filmmaker have been recognized and honored by numerous institutions (American Film Institute’s Maya Deren Award, Edward MacDowell Medal, International Documentary Association Lifetime Achievement Award, and Hot Docs Outstanding Achievement Award). Now, more than a decade since his death, his son Harrod Blank has worked tirelessly to preserve his films. This summer, BAMPFA showcases many of the remastered films, including the Bay Area premiere of the new 4K restoration of Burden of Dreams. We present two films that were completed or released posthumously: Thailand Moment (1967/2015) and A Poem Is a Naked Person (1974/2015). We also look forward to hosting filmmakers who collaborated with Blank, as well as several individuals who were subjects in his films.

THE EARLY YEARS: THE BLUES ACCORDIN’ TO LIGHTNIN’ HOPKINS AND HOT PEPPER
IN CONVERSATION
Skip Gerson, Maureen Gosling, and Harrod Blank

In 1967 Blank and Skip Gerson were hired to work in Thailand on a documentary about the B-52 bomber and its use in bombing campaigns over Vietnam. Access to the plane was never granted, and the project never materialized. Instead, Blank and Gerson traveled around Thailand filming whatever attracted them. (Thailand Moment was completed posthumously in 2015 by Harrod Blank, edited by Ben Abrams.) The next year, they went on to make the musical portrait The Blues Accordin’ to Lightnin’ Hopkins, which features the lively combination of music, food, and anecdotes that has come to characterize Blank’s style. In 1972 Blank collaborated with Maureen Gosling on Hot Pepper, filming Clifton Chenier in Louisiana and capturing the pulsing rhythms of zydeco dance music.

THE EARLY YEARS: A WELL SPENT LIFE AND SPEND IT ALL
IN CONVERSATION
Skip Gerson, Maureen Gosling, and Harrod Blank

A Well Spent Life is a portrait of legendary Texas blues songster and guitarist Mance Lipscomb. Featuring Lipscomb’s life-affirming views on love, music, and human comradeship, this encounter reveals the bluesman’s world and Blank’s graceful filmmaking of the American South. Spend It All is a beautiful celebration of the food and music of French-speaking Cajuns of Louisiana, featuring Nathan Abshire, the Balfa Brothers, and Marc Savoy. Werner Herzog was so inspired by this work that he famously lifted one of the most memorable scenes for his own film Stroszek. Preceding the documentaries, we present a short documentary interview with Chris Strachwitz, who founded Arhoolie Records and recalls meeting Mance Lipscomb.

A POEM IS A NAKED PERSON
LES BLANK, MAUREEN GOSLING (US, 1974/2015) DIGITAL RESTORATION
IN CONVERSATION
Maureen Gosling and Harrod Blank

Considered by Blank to be one of his major accomplishments, A Poem Is a Naked Person is a documentary about the compelling singer-songwriter Leon Russell. Blank and Gosling spent much of the period 1972–74 filming in northeast Oklahoma, but the film was only released posthumously in 2015, when Harrod Blank was successful in resolving creative differences with Russell and clearing the music rights. “A Poem Is a Naked Person is, finally, a reflection on what it is to be alive, told in the visual and aural and musical idioms of its time and place. It’s that big. It is about life as motion, just going, from day to day” (Kent Jones, Current).

ALWAYS FOR PLEASURE
LES BLANK (US, 1978)

IN CONVERSATION  Maureen Gosling, Chris Simon, John Santos, and Harrod Blank

Chris Simon is a documentary filmmaker who spent seventeen years producing the films of Les Blank.

John Santos is a multi-Grammy-nominated percussionist, prolific Afro-Latin band leader, composer, teacher, writer, and producer who has worked with acknowledged masters like Cachao, Dizzy Gillespie, Tito Puente, Max Roach, and Omar Sosa.

Blank's most joyous film, Always for Pleasure presents festivity as essential to the human spirit. In New Orleans, even a funeral procession ends with a raucous dance—“You take ’em on out and you boogie back,” explains musician Allen Toussaint. Blank’s camera enters the heart of such jubilant celebrations—with drinking, dancing, and eating in the streets.

BURDEN OF DREAMS
LES BLANK, MAUREEN GOSLING (US, 1982) BAY AREA PREMIERE OF 4K DIGITAL RESTORATION

IN CONVERSATION
Maureen Gosling, Harrod Blank, and Anthony Matt

Anthony Matt is a film archivist responsible for the restoration of Burden of Dreams, as well as many of the recently remastered Les Blank films.

"One of the most vivid studies of the creative process ever filmed." Herald Examiner

Burden of Dreams documents Werner Herzog's obsessive drive to make his 1982 film, Fitzcarraldo. The title character (played by Klaus Kinski) was himself obsessively driven to build an opera house in the turn-of-the-century Amazon. Stunning footage of the seething jungle and its native inhabitants sets the scene for director Herzog's four-year struggle to complete his film. Facing a nonstop series of obstacles to his dream, Herzog claims, "I'm running out of fantasy," as birds call loudly in the background. In one of the more unusual films about filmmaking, Blank and Maureen Gosling capture a story that has to be seen to be believed.

HAYAO MIYAZAKI’S SPIRITED CINEMA

Preternaturally attuned to the internal landscape of children and adults alike, Hayao Miyazaki built his career on the philosophy that the fictional worlds of animation “soothe the spirit of those who are . . . suffering from a nearsighted distortion of their emotions.” To achieve such lofty aims, he works from a palette of “whatever I want to create,” which often includes a bestiary of snarling, grotesque demons and cute, cuddly sprites (appearances can be deceiving). His films are rich with kinetic action set pieces, impressionistic pastoral beauty, and staggering sweeps above the clouds. The wind through the reeds, and sunlight reflected on a babbling brook: these moments, always in motion and punctuated by Joe Hisaishi’s indispensable music, only amplify the human element. The giddiness of sisters exploring their new home in My Neighbor Totoro, Kiki’s lonely pancake dinners in Kiki’s Delivery Service, and Chihiro toe tapping her shoes into place in Spirited Away provide seamless grounding in Miyazaki’s worlds of fantasy—and often environmental devastation.

Miyazaki was born in Tokyo in 1941. He wrote, “My first memories are of bombed-out cities.” This searing imagery and a wartime childhood marked by rationing and occupation inform his outspoken pacifist convictions. The catastrophe of war, industrialization, and environmental neglect is present very early in his work with Nausicaä of the Valley of the Wind and throughout his late work, like The Boy and the Heron. One of his great strengths as an animator is the sense of scale in his frames. The visuals translate emotionally, and Miyazaki’s films are joyous and melancholy, intimate and immense.

Roger Ebert, Chicago Sun-Times

(Mononoke hime). Princess Mononoke combines animist myths, Japanese folklore, a matriarchal heroine, and a “green planet” ethos to create an epic cinematic experience. It achieves one of animation’s—and cinema’s—most wonderful effects: fabricating a world, immaculately realized, that is at once unbelievable and believable.

In a long-ago Japan, a war is raging for the future of Earth, one that sets the animal kingdom against humanity, nature against pollution, and harmony against chaos. Two humans stand between the worlds, and amid the bloodshed: San, a feral child raised by wolves, who considers herself animal and humans her enemies; and Ashitaka, a man whose peacefulness hides a great power, and an even greater curse.

HAYAO MIYAZAKI (JAPAN, 1979)

(Rupan sansei: Kariosutoro no shiro). After working on the Lupin III television series, Miyazaki returned to the popular adventure serial to direct his first feature film. The Castle of Cagliostro opens as Arsène Lupin III—a roguish, James Bond-like, international gentleman thief of mystery—and his trusty aide-de-camp and best friend, Daisuke Jigen, discover that the mountain of cash they just stole is counterfeit. The chain-smoking duo's investigation leads them to the Monaco-like microstate of Cagliostro, where they must expose the counterfeiting plot and rescue a damsel in distress from the castle tower. (Gake no ue no Ponyo). Miyazaki heads offshore for this ecstatic fairy tale of a little goldfish princess who dreams of becoming a human girl and the small boy who becomes her friend. Underneath a raging Japanese sea live little Ponyo—a half-human, half-fish girl—and her wizard father, who hates trash-strewing humans. On the cliffs above them lives Sosuke, a polite young boy who lives with his strong-willed mother. As Ponyo and Sosuke’s friendship grows—and as Ponyo turns more human—the seas begin to transform, threatening Sosuke’s little island with destruction. Ponyo blends the storytelling finesse of a classic fable with Miyazaki’s deep love for the environment and his trademark heroines—all strong, willful, and utterly lovable.

NAUSICAA OF THE VALLEY OF THE WIND
HAYAO MIYAZAKI (JAPAN, 1984)

BAMPFA COLLECTION

(Kaze no tani no Nausicaä). Miyazaki might consider his single greatest work to be not one of his films, but rather the manga epic Nausicaä, which he labored to complete between 1982 and 1994. In this movie adaptation, made early in the process, genetically engineered weapons have burned civilization to the ground, leaving behind the seeds of a new global ecology that has made humans aliens on their own planet. Nausicaä’s eponymous princess—both soldier and scientist—seeks to reconcile the last remnants of her still-warring species with the monstrous biological order overtaking Earth. The film is a sweeping epic of war and adventure, and one of the best science fiction films made anywhere during the 1980s.

PORCO ROSSO
HAYAO MIYAZAKI (JAPAN, 1992)

(Kurenai no buta). Based on a short watercolor manga the director created for a model-building magazine, Porco Rosso was originally planned as an in-flight film for Japan Airlines. The tale of a (literally) pig-headed seaplane pilot who hunts air pirates over the late 1920s Adriatic Sea grew into a feature-length adventure, in which the titular World War I veteran teams up with a plucky teen engineer to take on a hotdogging American aviator against a backdrop of simmering fascism. It is a celebration of mechanics and the fruits of dedicated labor, which Miyazaki and his artisan animators exemplify as planes swim, sputter, and soar from sea to sky and back again.

HAYAO MIYAZAKI (JAPAN, 2023)

(Kimitachi wa dou ikiru ka, a.k.a. How Do You Live?). Miyazaki’s self-proclaimed final film—though he previously made the same claim about Princess Mononoke and The Wind Rises—takes a maximalist approach to storytelling and reckons with the legacy of a life rich in contradiction. In the shadow of World War II, twelve-year-old Mahito, bereft and sullen, is displaced to a countryside estate with his father and new stepmother—who also happens to be his aunt. Trolling the grounds and sky above is an overfamiliar, pestering gray heron who leads Mahito deep into a realm of hallucinatory, time-bending fantasy, where he confronts a magical fisherwoman, blobby spirits called warawara, a parakeet army, and his own past and future. This summer we revisit a style of filmmaking that emerged in Hollywood in the early 1940s, was later coined “film noir,” and was later still championed by the French New Wave critics. From The Maltese Falcon (1941) to The Killing (1956), BAMPFA’s series offers viewers a chance to see many archival 35mm prints and digital restorations of film noir masterpieces and revel in the plot twists of these vastly entertaining and suspenseful mysteries, melodramas, and crime thrillers.

With its distinctive play of shadows, lighting, camera angles, and compositional tension, film noir became an international phenomenon adopted by filmmakers around the world—an approach that has influenced generations of filmmakers through the neo-noir and Tech noir periods. Film noir was born out of a confluence of cinematic and literary sources. We see influences of German Expressionism, French Poetic Realism, Italian neorealism, and American pulp fiction in these films. A number of the directors represented in this series were émigrés to the United States (Michael Curtiz, Otto Preminger, Robert Siodmak, Jacques Tourneur, and Billy Wilder), who brought European influences to their Hollywood productions. Many celebrated writers (James M. Cain, Vera Caspary, Raymond Chandler, Dashiell Hammett, Ernest Hemingway, Dorothy B. Hughes, and Cornell Woolrich) penned the original stories or screenplays. Archetypal elements and themes are found in these compelling narratives, such as an exploration of codes of loyalty, duplicity, and psychological concerns. In a sense, these noirs reflect America’s paranoia and cynicism during a time when disillusionment from the wars fought and the political oppression experienced in the first half of the twentieth century was a strong undercurrent in society.

The celebrated film historian David Thomson joins us on June 16 to give a fifty-minute lecture on the stylistics of film noir before The Lady from Shanghai. He will also introduce In A Lonely Place and Out of the Past. For all three appearances, Thomson will lead post-screening discussions with the audience.

4 Phantom Lady 6.27.24
The film begins at 4:30.

If there's an archetype of the noir femme fatale, Barbara Stanwyck's Phyllis Dietrichson is it: she wears her platinum wig like a steel helmet and her anklet like the tag on a half-wild animal. When insurance salesman Walter Neff (Fred MacMurray) arrives at her Los Feliz bungalow, Phyllis greets him in a towel, not fully covered but fully in control. As their relationship of lopsided lust and mutual opportunism proceeds, though, it becomes clear that nobody can control what happens down the line. The movie has been accused of misogyny, perhaps rightly. But loathsome opportunism proceeds, though, it becomes clear that nobody can control what happens down the line. THE KILLERS
ROBERT SIODMAK (US, 1946)
DIGITAL RESTORATION

Ernest Hemingway's short story about a man who does not try to escape his killers is acted out tensely and accurately, and for once, the gangster-thriller material added to it is not just padding but is also shrewdly conceived (by Anthony Veiller and John Huston, although Huston's name does not appear in the script credits) to show why the man doesn't care enough about life to run away. Under the expert direction of Robert Siodmak, Burt Lancaster gives his first screen performance (and is astonishingly effective); Siodmak has also done wonders with Ava Gardner.

Written by Raymond Chandler. Photographed by Lionel Lindon. With Alan Ladd, Veronica Lake, William Bendix, Doris Dowling, Howard da Silva. (100 mins, B&W, 35mm, From Universal Pictures)

THE BIG CLOCK
JOHN FARROW (US, 1948)
35MM ARCHIVAL PRINT

The Big Clock creates a closed world of paranoia reminiscent of the films of Fritz Lang. Ray Milland plays George Stroud, editor of Crimeways magazine, part of a publishing empire owned by Earl Janoth (Charles Laughton). “When Janoth murders his mistress . . . he is forced to engage the resources of his organization to track down the one witness to his guilt. Every part is ideally cast, from Rita Johnson’s wry mistress to Elsa Lanchester’s gurgling Greenwich Village artist. Above all, the giant clock which dominates the proceedings—nerve center of the Janoth organization . . . with its endlessly ticking dials, pulsing dynamo, and gliding levers reminds one of the heart of Metropolis” (Charles Higham, Joel Greenberg, Hollywood in the Forties).

Written by Huston, from the novel by Dashiell Hammett. Photographed by Arthur Edeson. With Humphrey Bogart, Mary Astor, Gladys George, Peter Lorre. (100 mins, B&W, 35mm, From Library of Congress, permission Park Circus)

THE MALTESE FALCON
JOHN HUSTON (US, 1941)
35MM ARCHIVAL PRINT

In The Maltese Falcon, screenwriter-turned-director John Huston created a shadowed, unreal territory where nothing is as it seems. The rules of the game keep changing for everyone, save Sam Spade (Humphrey Bogart), who is unfailingly guided by his obfuscated sense of justice and a morality that has come full circle. This third adaptation of Dashiell Hammett’s novel was thoroughly charmed. The ensemble acting between Bogart, Peter Lorre, Sydney Greenstreet (in his first screen appearance after forty years as a Shakespearean actor), and Elisha Cook Jr. is sublime. Huston adds to the overall sense of drama by keeping the viewer neatly poised between omniscience and Spade’s viewpoint. SALLY SYBERG

THE KINGDOM
MIKE NICHOLS (US, 1956)
35MM ARCHIVAL PRINT

The Kingdom is perhaps the most celebrated of the films of the New York School, a group that includes Don Siegel’s The Big Heat (1953) and Sidney Lumet’s 12 Angry Men (1957). It is about a group of retired people who gather in New York to discuss a murder trial that they believe is a travesty of justice. The film is a masterpiece of character study, with an ensemble cast that includes Burt Lancaster, Elisha Cook Jr., and Maureen O’Sullivan. Written by John F. Seitz, from a story by Ernest Hemingway. Photographed by Harold Rosson. With Burt Lancaster, Maureen O’Sullivan, George Macready, Anthony Caruso, Richard Bakalyan. (103 mins, B&W, 35mm, From Universal Pictures)

THE BLUE DAHLIA
GEORGE MARSHALL (US, 1946)

An excellent illustration of postwar disillusionment, this complex tale of blackmail and murder explores the psyche of servicemen returning after World War II to a home that seems to have changed beyond recognition. Mystery writer Raymond Chandler’s original script won an Academy Award nomination for Best Screenplay, and Alan Ladd gives one of his best performances as a soldier who becomes the prime suspect in the murder of his unfaithful wife. Veronica Lake portrays a wisecracking, seductive runaway, and William Bendix imparts a powerful tragicomic presence in the role of Ladd’s shell-shocked buddy.

Written by Jonathan Latimer, from the novel by Kenneth Fearing, adapted by Harold Goldman. Photographed by John F. Seitz. With Ray Milland, Charles Laughton, Maureen O’Sullivan, George Macready, (93 mins, B&W, 35mm, From UCLA Film & Television Archive, permission Universal Pictures)

MILDRED PIERCE
MICHAEL CURTIZ (US, 1945)
DIGITAL RESTORATION

After her husband leaves her, Mildred Pierce (Joan Crawford) devotes her energies and talents to providing for her elder daughter, Veda, who suffers from perpetual dissatisfaction. Veda prefers her mother, a waitress turned restaurant owner, for earning their living. In a disquieting mixture of the dark, unsettling world of film noir and the open, daylit world of melodrama, Mildred’s obsessive love for her daughter ends in a murder that begins the film. In flashbacks, the murder emerges as one of many interconnected crimes—crimes born not of physical violence, but rather of emotional and psychological needs. KATHY GERITZ

LAURA

OTTO PREMINGER (US, 1944)

Vera Caspary’s best-known story, Laura, is told from multiple viewpoints; character is mystery, and action becomes a question. Otto Preminger’s fluid, probing style replaces the “purp purp” of a cop’s pipe and privileges the audience by unearthing the corrosive layer beneath the sublime surface of Manhattan’s art world. Clifton Webb sets the tone of duplicity as the outwardly cynical, inwardly hysterical columnist Waldo Lydecker, while haunted cop Dana Andrews falls in love with a painted image. As Laura, Gene Tierney is at once ethereal and cunning, like cinema itself, a dream wanting a life of its own.

THURSDAY / 7.18.24

CRISS CROSS

ROBERT SIODMAK (US, 1949)

The film opens with an aerial nighttime view of a metropolis, but the camera soon draws its circle around three figures acting out an obsessive “criss cross” of love and betrayal: Burt Lancaster, a would-be petty crook; Dan Duryea, as always, hiding cruelty behind his baby face; and Yvonne De Carlo, wed, in her way, to both. In the first moments of dialogue (“Meet me at the house at Palos Verdes”), the setting is revealed to be Los Angeles. Criss Cross is taut, exciting, extremely well-written, and one of the best of the sleazy underworld films of the 1940s, the closest Robert Siodmak came to capturing the essence of Fritz Lang.

Written by Daniel Fuchs, from the novel by Don Tracy. Photographed by Franz Planer. With Burt Lancaster, Dan Duryea, Stephen McNally. (87 mins, B&W, DCP, From Universal Pictures)

THE KILLING

STANLEY KUBRICK (US, 1956)

Stanley Kubrick’s high-voltage suspense thriller stars Sterling Hayden as the ex-con who masterminds a two-million-dollar holdup of a heavily guarded racetrack. His cohorts include a colorless little cashier prodded by his wife’s demands for dough, a reformed drunk, a racketeering cop, and the track bartender. The action is taut as it follows each man’s role up to the point of the heist, and the film loses no acuity in its exploration of the domestic lives and personal motives of the criminals. Kubrick’s direction of his own script is fast-paced and incisive, at times almost documentary, and Lucien Ballard’s excellent photography is augmented by well-chosen stock racetrack footage.

Written by Kubrick, additional dialogue by Jim Thompson, based on the novel Clean Break by Lionel White. Photographed by Lucien Ballard. With Sterling Hayden, Jay C. Flippen, Marie Windsor, Elisha Cook Jr. (84 mins, B&W, DCP, From Park Circus)

KISS ME DEADLY

ROBERT ALDRICH (US, 1955)

Robert Aldrich melted down the B detective thriller into a vision of Armageddon: Kiss Me Deadly was years ahead of its time in being so very audaciously about its time—and place. From the opening sequence—a desperate ride through nowhere shot in glistening blacks and not much white—Aldrich and cinematographer Ernest Laszlo evoke a world that is not quite recognizable yet is frighteningly familiar. The sincerely deadpan acting of Ralph Meeker as Mickey Spillane’s Mike Hammer offers a nihilistic antihero whose mediocrity is well met by the company he keeps. In a plot played out in paranoid glances and unanswered questions, at once comic-book naive and amazingly cynical, the search is not for jewels or statuettes or even drugs, but for a lead-lined box containing a small atomic bomb.

Written by A. I. Bezzerides, based on the novel by Mickey Spillane. Photographed by Ernest Laszlo. With Ralph Meeker, Cloris Leachman, Albert Dekker, Maxine Cooper. (106 mins, international version with original ending, B&W, DCP, From Park Circus)

As a boy Ennio Morricone (1928–2020) considered becoming a doctor or competitive chess player, but he was encouraged by his father, a trumpet player, to study music. After graduating from the Conservatory of Music Santa Cecilia, Morricone, while writing his own compositions, worked as a trumpet player and arranger of popular music. In 1961 he began scoring movies. Morricone was constantly engaged in research and experimentation—from 1964 to 1980, he performed and recorded with the avant-garde improvisation ensemble Gruppo di Improvvisazione Nuova Consonanza—and the depth and scope of his musical erudition, from classical to jazz, popular to experimental, orchestral to folk, are evident in the hundreds of films he scored.

Along with the iconic Italian Westerns he scored for Sergio Leone, Morricone’s talent for deploying unique instrumentation for dramatic, critical, or comic effect is apparent in his work on the first films of Lina Wertmüller (The Lizards) and Marco Bellocchio (Fists in the Pocket). Elio Petri’s Giallo ghost story A Quiet Place in the Country and twisted policier Investigation of a Citizen Above Suspicion feature radically different soundscapes to communicate psychological rupture and social decay. Themes of revolutionary hope and the forces that would crush it are powerfully realized in the music of Gillo Pontecorvo’s The Battle of Algiers and Liliana Cavani’s The Year of the Cannibals, while the temporal complexity and moral ambivalence of Leone’s Once Upon a Time in America resonate through Morricone’s composition. Replete with new restorations, Made in Italy: Morricone, Leone, and More offers the opportunity to be immersed in the movies that launched the maestro’s career.

(Per un pugno di dollari). This first “spaghetti” Western was a sagebrush version of Akira Kurosawa’s Yojimbo, with lanky Clint Eastwood as The Man with No Name, an itinerant gunslinger who finds himself in a beat-up border town ruled over by two ruthless clans. Dressed in the poncho and dusty Stetson that would be his well-worn wardrobe through two sequels, the nameless one plays one clan off the other in a bit of inspired treachery. Morricone’s bravura mix of surf guitar, gongs, and rustic choir only adds to the delirium of this virtuosic oater filled with tumbleweed nihilism.

THE LIZARDS
LINA WERTMÜLLER (ITALY, 1963)

NEW DIGITAL RESTORATION

(I basilischi). Lina Wertmüller’s brilliant first feature chronicles the suffocating structures of small-town life in the south of Italy by focusing on a trio of young men who hang out and daydream, half-heartedly and clumsily stumbling toward unpromising adulthood. Their fathers, business owners, and bureaucrats gripe and scold. Meanwhile, doing their best to sidestep patriarchal limitations, the women and girls try to get on with their own lives. Cinematographer Gianni Di Venanzo (8 1/2, L’eclisse) brings an elegant modern sensibility to the old-world environs, and Morricone’s inventive score for what he described as his first “auteur film” adds a wry, poignant atmosphere.

FOR A FEW DOLLARS MORE
SERGIO LEONE (ITALY, 1965)

Repeats Thursday / 8.15.24

(Per qualche dollaro in più). If Sergio Leone has a brand, it’s the trinity: A Fistful of Dollars had Clint Eastwood, The Man with No Name, triangulated with two rivalrous clans. For a Few Dollars More, the quasi-sequel, retrieves the ever-vicious Gian Maria Volontè, now as El Indio, and adds the third spoke, a reptilian Lee Van Cleef playing a bounty hunter whose way with weapons equals that of Eastwood. When the battered bodies start stacking up like cords of wood, we look on with arid admiration. And look on we do, as the monumental landscape—indifferent host to the mounting mayhem—spreads out before us.

NEW 4K DIGITAL RESTORATION

PRERECORDED VIDEO INTRODUCTION
Carmine-Emanuele Cella

(La battaglia di Algeri). The first European film to treat the explosive subject of colonialism and wars of liberation, Gillo Pontecorvo’s reconstruction of the Algerian rebellion against the French remains the most powerful. A flashback format and newsreel “documentary” precision—though it was entirely staged—give a palpable sense of inevitability to the terrible violence, but also to its result. Along with choral music, organ, and Algerian drumming, Morricone’s score uses a propulsive snare drum–backed theme to represent the French occupying forces, while the revolutionary leader’s lyrical theme originates on the pan flute, suggesting the breath, body, and humanity of the struggle.

FISTS IN THE POCKET
MARCO BELLOCCHIO (ITALY, 1965)

(I pugni in tasca). In his first film, Marco Bellocchio attempted to break away from traditional analytical and descriptive methods of narration. “The style dictated itself while I was shooting,” he said. “I simply wanted to convey my own love-hate feelings about life as effectively as I could, with no premeditation.” On the film’s presentation at the 1966 San Francisco International Film Festival, Albert Johnson described it as “a deterministic examination of the way in which an adolescent tries to insert himself into the contemporary world . . . a genuinely moving slice-of-life, for the performances are extremely urgent, impulsive, and alive.”

THE GOOD, THE BAD AND THE UGLY
SERGIO LEONE (ITALY, 1966) EXTENDED CUT

Repeats Saturday / 8.24.24

(II buono, il brutto, il cattivo). The Good, the Bad and the Ugly is one of the most influential Westerns of all time and, more importantly, one of the most striking examples ever of how cinema can create a living myth out of pure visual spectacle. Like a brush on canvas, Sergio Leone’s lens colors desolation with beauty, juxtaposing close-ups of scarred faces with long-distance shots of sky-stretched panoramas to create a disorienting, almost hyperreal landscape, one aurally haunted by Morricone’s now-legendary score. Here the American hunt for gold winds up—literally—in the grave.

A QUIET PLACE IN THE COUNTRY
ELIO PETRI (ITALY, 1968)

(Un tranquillo posto di campagna). Featuring art by Jim Dine and music by Morricone and the Gruppo di Improvisazione Nuova Consonanza, Elio Petri’s Giallo ghost story situates a struggling artist, Leonardo (Franco Nero), between the demands of a successful career and relationship with his gallerist (Vanessa Redgrave) and the haunted villa in the country to which he decamps to focus on his work, only to be seduced by the villa’s otherworldly inhabitant. A Quiet Place in the Country scrapes a key across the high-gloss, pop aesthetic of Italy’s postwar economic miracle to reveal the undertow of the country’s unresolved fascist past.

ONCE UPON A TIME IN THE WEST
SERGIO LEONE (ITALY, 1968)

(C’era una volta il West). Where the Dollars trilogy was about the lethal lengths to which one might go to get a fistful, this saga draws a bead on the taming of the once-wild West as an industrial enterprise. Henry Fonda does the bidding of a railway tycoon driven by his own loco motives. Derailing the plans of big money is Claudia Cardinale as a frontier widow fighting for her spread, aided by Jason Robards and Charles Bronson as two high plains drifters. All of Sergio Leone’s punch-drunk particulars are here: the epic close-ups of weathered faces, Morricone’s telegraphic score, and smokin’ shoot-outs set against majestic vistas.

ONCE UPON A TIME
IN AMERICA
SERGIO LEONE (ITALY/US, 1984)
EXTENDED DIRECTOR’S CUT

(C’era una volta in America). Covering almost five decades, this bloodied American fairytale follows two Jewish pals as they rise through the ranks of Roaring Twenties racketeering in New York’s Lower East Side. Shot in elegiac tones by Tonino Delli Colli, the film gives us craven double-dealings and street-side ambushes, brute betrayals and manhandled mistresses, all with the poetry of the gutter, and all seen through the unfaltering eyes of Noodles, now an aged gangster whose great melancholy will not release him from the prison of time. Time, according to Sergio Leone, is the principal character of the film, and that which Morricone’s classic score evokes.

Written by Leone, Leonardo Benvenuti, Piero De Bernardi, Enrico Medioli, Franco Ferrini, based on the novel The Hoods by Harry Grey.

Photographed by Tonino Delli Colli. With Robert De Niro, James Woods, Elizabeth McGovern, Treat Williams. (251 mins plus 10-min intermission, Color, DCP, From Criterion Pictures)

THE YEAR OF THE CANNIBALS
LILIANA CAVANI (ITALY, 1970)

(I cannibali). A loose adaptation of Sophocles’s Antigone, Liliana Cavani’s The Year of the Cannibals is a tale of resistance against totalitarianism. It is set in an unnamed contemporary city, strewn with bodies of dead activists, which the citizens are forbidden to move, touch, or bury. Going against official orders, Antigone (Britt Ekland) is aided by Tiresias (Pierre Clémenti), who helps her entomb some of the dead. Given the beauty of the mise-en-scène, it is astonishing that Cavani and cinematographer Giulio Albonico shot the film without permission in Milan. Morricone’s powerful choral compositions complete the film’s perfectly pitched defiance.

TEOREMA
PIER PAOLO PASOLINI (ITALY, 1968)

(Theorem). Pier Paolo Pasolini combines themes composed by Morricone with the music of Mozart and Ted Curson in his first film shot in a bourgeois milieu. An attractive stranger (Terence Stamp) takes up residence in the home of a factory owner. Described by Pasolini as “a generically ultra-terrestrial and metaphysical apparition: he could be the Devil, or a mixture of God and the Devil. The important thing is that he is something authentic and unstoppable.” One by one, each family member seeks—and finds—in the visitor a catalyst for the fulfillment of desires denied within the confines of the family structure.

THE YEAR OF THE CANNIBALS
LILIANA CAVANI (ITALY, 1970)

(I cannibali). A loose adaptation of Sophocles’s Antigone, Liliana Cavani’s The Year of the Cannibals is a tale of resistance against totalitarianism. It is set in an unnamed contemporary city, strewn with bodies of dead activists, which the citizens are forbidden to move, touch, or bury. Going against official orders, Antigone (Britt Ekland) is aided by Tiresias (Pierre Clémenti), who helps her entomb some of the dead. Given the beauty of the mise-en-scène, it is astonishing that Cavani and cinematographer Giulio Albonico shot the film without permission in Milan. Morricone’s powerful choral compositions complete the film’s perfectly pitched defiance.

Born in 1903 (the same year as Yasujiro Ozu), Hiroshi Shimizu made some 150 films between 1924 and 1959. While the majority of those have been lost, a significant number of excellent films have survived. Drawing from a retrospective organized by the Japan Society and the Museum of the Moving Image in New York, Hiroshi Shimizu: Notes of an Itinerant Director offers a chance to rediscover the work of one of the great directors of the golden age of Japanese cinema.

Shimizu’s films depict characters on the move, out of place, or in the margins—performers, migrant workers, people with disabilities, working women, and, especially, children. His protagonists are buffeted by economic vicissitudes and social or political circumstances. As they endeavor to find their way, they may traverse the pathways of a quiet spa town or the teeming streets of Tokyo, grassy rural fields or dusty mountain roads. Usually shooting on location—creating a sense of openness, space, and place—Shimizu’s camera observes them, usually from a distance, and sometimes taking a journey of its own, tracking across a landscape or interior, revealing as if unscrolling the details of the surroundings. He chronicles the struggles of his characters with a light touch, avoiding melodrama and inflecting even the most serious stories with humor and profound humanity.

A HERO OF TOKYO
HIROSHI SHIMIZU (JAPAN, 1935)
35MM ARCHIVAL PRINT

(Tokyo no eiyu). Shimizu’s first acclaim outside Japan spotlighted his films on children and his more genial tales, but A Hero of Tokyo crystallizes his other, more hard-boiled melodramas of social critique and urban noir. After her new husband skips town thanks to shady business deals, a widow covertly becomes a bar hostess to pay for her children’s education. Years later, her secret is revealed, with predictably heartbreaking results that are later made worse by the husband’s reappearance. Gangsters and prostitutes, newspapermen and swindlers (running a “Manchuria-Mongolia Gold Mine” scheme, in a pointed nod to Japan’s wartime imperialism) merge with family honor and filial duty, creating one of early Japanese cinema’s darkest, most sorrowful works.

FORGET LOVE FOR NOW
HIROSHI SHIMIZU (JAPAN, 1937)

(Koi mo wasurete). A single mother turned bar hostess struggles to raise her son in the face of social condemnation and economic exploitation in this major rediscovery of not only the films of Shimizu, but also Japanese cinema and prewar film noir. Shimizu eschews his usual location shooting in favor of creating an entirely set-bound realm of shadows and fading light, with characters framed within sinister alleyways, Art Deco nightclubs, or—even more dangerously—children’s playgrounds. The aesthetic of a fog-drenched noir combines with commentary on Japanese family honor and maternal duty, but the film’s most surprising element is how contemporary it feels today, with Shimizu pausing the storytelling to simply observe.

NOTES OF AN ITINERANT PERFORMER
HIROSHI SHIMIZU (JAPAN, 1941)
35MM ARCHIVAL PRINT

(Utajo oboegaki). An extraordinary tracking shot along a forested mountain pass opens Shimizu’s melodrama on women’s limited roles in Japanese society. An itinerant or wandering performer in a theatrical troupe (considered one of the lower classes), Uta is taken in by a good-hearted tea merchant; after his death, she inherits his company (and its obligations) and must face everything from American businessmen to rival tea merchants to survive, none of whom take her seriously. (Tellingly, her main success is in forming a cooperative.) Not surprisingly for a wartime film, social obligation and female self-sacrifice are celebrated, though as ambiguously, and tragically, as the times would allow.

CHILDREN IN THE WIND
HIROSHI SHIMIZU (JAPAN, 1937)
35MM ARCHIVAL PRINT

(Kaze no naka no kodomo). Shimizu’s best-known film is typical of his work in that it is shot in a variety of outdoor locations and looks at children almost to the exclusion of adults. It is the story of two brothers who are separated when their father is falsely accused of forgery and arrested. “Shimizu was not interested in child psychology . . . nor was he interested in making this world a microcosm of the adult world . . . He was interested only in the child’s world, as seen by the child. If the result was an implied criticism of the traditional adult world, so much the better” (Donald Richie). The boys’ adventures continued in Four Seasons of Children.

(Kodomo no shiki: Part I: Shunka no maki and Part II: Shuto no maki). In this sequel to Children in the Wind, Shimizu unfolds the further adventures of the two brothers, Zenta and Sanpei. Against the poetic background of the four seasons, the boys deal with their father’s death, are forced to find work, and weather it all with their inherent optimism. For critic John Gillett, Four Seasons “is an expressive fusion of all Shimizu’s thematic and stylistic preoccupations: distant shooting of figures placed in a living, open-air landscape, a loving regard for children, and a traveling camera which always reveals. The passage of time is conveyed in sequences of limpid, lyrical impressionism which look forward to early Satyajit Ray.”

Written by Shimizu, based on a novel by Joji Tsubota. Photographed by Masao Saito, Yuharu Atsuta. With Reikichi Kawamura, Mitsuko Yoshikawa, Masao Hayama, Jun Yokoyama. (142 mins, In Japanese with English electronic titling, B&W, 35mm, From National Film Archive of Japan, permission Shochiku)

CHILDREN OF THE BEEHIVE
HIROSHI SHIMIZU (JAPAN, 1948)

(Hachinosu no kodomotachi). A vagrant group of orphans joins forces with a returning veteran to search for jobs—and hope—across a scarred postwar Japan in Shimizu’s remarkable work of Japanese neorealism, filmed entirely on location—including in a Hiroshima still marked by the atomic bomb. The film’s location-based realism is further enhanced by the casting, with the children all actual war orphans drawn from an orphanage that the independently wealthy Shimizu had opened after the war. Released the same year as Vittorio De Sica’s Bicycle Thief, the film shows not a debt to Italian neorealism, but a parallel movement, here artfully enhanced by Shimizu’s virtuoso tracking shots and outdoor set pieces. MR. SHOSUKE OHARA
HIROSHI SHIMIZU (JAPAN, 1949)

(Ohara Shosuke-san). Based on an archetypal Japanese character of a rich man who eats, drinks, and squanders away his family fortune, Mr. Shosuke Ohara is a village comedy of manners with a surprisingly elegiac edge, fitting for the postwar 1949 climate, where, in the words of the main character, “times have changed.” A reluctant inheritor of fortune, the kindly Shosuke-san actually seems less a village drunk than a radical redistributor of wealth, funding everything from a village baseball team to sewing machines to help women enter the workforce. Fortune dissipating, he borrows to promptly give away, until—as another haunting Shimizu tracking shot reveals—hardly anything remains. JASON SANDERS

DANCING GIRL
HIROSHI SHIMIZU (JAPAN, 1957)
BAMPFA COLLECTION

(Odoriko). Japan’s 1950s sex symbol Machiko Kyo ignites Shimizu’s late-career look at two sisters taking different paths to succeed in a world that has little room for women. Revue dancer Hanae (Chikage Awashima) seems content headlining shows and living in cramped quarters with her violinist boyfriend (Eiji Funakoshi), but things change when her curvy young sister (Kyo) arrives. Little sis knows how men look at her and how to manipulate that in the modern world. Filmed amidst the teeming streets and nightclubs of Asakusa, Tokyo, Dancing Girl may bounce to the mambo, but its critiques of Japanese family duty (and a woman’s sacrifice for it) echo throughout Shimizu’s career. BAMPFA is honored to welcome Lynne Ramsay to present a retrospective of her extraordinary films this August. As a writer and director, Ramsay has—since her first Cannes Film Festival award–winning short film, Small Deaths—been interested in exploring those shifts in perception that forever change a person’s relationship to the world and often to themselves. She has a talent for creating and communicating a palpable sense of place, an atmosphere within which complex social relationships play out and the emotional and psychological state of her characters is reflected.

Ramsay, drawn to photography before her shift to filmmaking, said that she “thinks in images” and references photographers like Richard Billingham, William Eggleston, and Nan Goldin among her influences. Her movies benefit from her keen eye for what Henri Cartier-Bresson dubbed “the decisive moment.” As Lizzie Francke observed, Ramsay has a “documentarian’s sensitivity to details both abstract and absurd, she can draw the viewer’s eye to some gesture that is both casual and momentous—while she allows almost still images to resonate.” Ramsay makes space for this resonance in her edits, and as in the films of Robert Bresson, her precise and selective use of sound creates heightened awareness in the viewer. Hers is a cinema that is sensed as much as it is seen.

LYNNE RAMSAY (UK, 1999)

IN PERSON Lynne Ramsay

Set in a working-class Glasgow neighborhood during the 1973 garbage strike, Ratcatcher finds beauty and magic amidst the detritus. Ramsay’s depiction of the place and its inhabitants—portrayed by neighborhood kids along with professional actors—is focused on the point of view of one boy, distressed by his part in the accidental death of another. Immersured in the meticulously constructed yet absolutely authentic world, the viewer becomes acutely sensitive to its details. As Lizzie Francke noted, Ramsay’s “willful, measured naïveté—balanced with a rigorous pursuit of vision—is precisely what allows the wonders and horrors of childhood to filter through her art, undiluted.”

Based on the prize-winning novel by Lionel Shriver, Ramsay’s adaptation turns the focus onto the grieving mother, ostracized and nearly living like a mournful ghost as she bears the brunt of a community’s wrath. Swinton is, as always, impeccable in this “disturbing tale told with uncompromising emotionality and great skill by Ramsay” (Kenneth Turan, Los Angeles Times).

BAMPFA 33
“If there’s something you don’t like, don’t keep to the rules—break them,” declared Czech filmmaker Věra Chytilová, “one of the Czechoslovak New Wave’s most rebellious, irreverent, and boundary-breaking talents” (Sight & Sound). A former fashion model, philosophy student, and film-clapboard operator, Chytilová unleashed some of the most cutting, antiauthoritarian, radically feminist works to ever shove a thumb in the eye of power. This selection of works from the 1960s and 1970s features many of the films that cemented her reputation, including the legendary, surrealist comedy Daisies. A true iconoclast, who grew up in a realm where ideology promised freedom, yet delivered only drudgery and control, Chytilová distrusted all labels or movements; she may never have identified as feminist, but her life—the only female in film school, a woman director among men—and her strong-willed, conflicted, uncontrollable women protagonists spoke volumes. Her work, as film historian Yvette Biro wrote, “denies conventional rules. It is a rigorously calculated frenzy . . . a macabre play, and if it succeeds in surprising the spectator constantly, it is not due to the irrational intrigue, but to its peculiar development from the grotesque into an existential desperateness.”

Coming of age during the relative openness of the Prague Spring, Chytilová remained in Czechoslovakia after many of her New Wave comrades had immigrated elsewhere; her mid-career work, made under totalitarian control, seethed with anger toward the state and the men who represented it. After the fall of Communism, her films still retained that fire; a new world order of capitalism may have emerged, but the politics of control, whether sexual or otherwise, remained to be critiqued.

Inspired by the Prague Spring, the best friends undertake a quest to find a life different from their previously regimented patriarchal society. Picking up men to fleece for fancy dinners, escaping sexual obligations by hopping trains, chatting up a man on the phone while roasting and cutting sausages in their room, the two are transgressive adventurers and inveterate consumers. (O něčem jiném). Chytilová’s debut feature may well have invented feminist vérité in its puglistic approach to documentary and narrative, closely intercutting the stories of two protagonists—a professional gymnast and a restless housewife—who never meet but share a similarly tracked existence. One toes a literal line of landings, vaults, and spins, ever watched over and harangued by an assortment of male coaches; the other drifts through the days, attempting to get her toddler son to behave (in some of cinema’s greatest, most realistic scenes of parenthood) and her husband to focus at all. “An unsung landmark of feminist cinema” (BAMcinématek). (Ovoce stromu rajských jíme, a.k.a. We Eat the Fruit of the Tree of Paradise). Chytilová’s little-seen masterpiece is the companion piece to Daisies, a dazzlingly complex, formally rigorous allegory of Adam and Eve. In the Garden of Eden of an Eastern European spa, Eva hands an apple to her husband, Joseph, but he prefers ogling the other female guests. Cue a handsome new arrival, who offers Eva a few new Satanic pleasures along with that apple, plus enough murderous intentions to cause the death of them all. A rare, inventive union of allegory, feminism, and the avant-garde—often compared to Federico Fellini’s Satyricon and the films of Sergei Paradjanov—Fruit of Paradise defies all interpretations, yet suggests new ones in every frame. THE SHORT FILMS OF VĚRA CHYTILOVÁ
An assured mix of New Wave energy and vérité straightforwardness, Chytilová’s graduation project, Ceiling, involves a young woman who quits medical school to become a model. Drawing on her own experiences as a “walking mannequin,” Chytilová explores a world of repetitive rituals and one woman’s courage to escape it. “The themes of anarchy and individualism that run through Chytilová’s work begin [in A Bagful of Fleas,] an almost docu-realistic look at women finding freedom and joy amid the rigid conformity of life in a communal factory dormitory” (BAMcinématek). Automat Svět, Chytilová’s contribution to the essential Czechoslovak New Wave omnibus Pearls of the Deep, makes a nocturnal visit to an overrun bar where two female workers try to keep the beer-hungry hordes out and a strange and handsome man meets a soon-to-be runaway bride.

A new suburban housing block in the midst of either construction or destruction provides the site of Chytilová’s biting satire of official incompetence and corruption and of the resourcefulness and/or deceit of those left living in its cracks. NOSTALGIA
ANDREI TARKOVSKY (USSR/ITALY, 1983)
DIGITAL RESTORATION

“Look at [Nostalgia] as though it were the window in a train traveling through your life,” Andrei Tarkovsky advised. The film follows the itinerary of a Russian intellectual in Italy on a nebulous research project; its breathtaking procession of images parallels the protagonist’s mental state, disorientation approaching the sublime. Shot mostly in Tuscany, this is a pilgrimage to ruined but magical spaces—a remote chapel of miracles, a decrepit pool where, it is said, Saint Catherine of Siena once bathed—that suggest both the decay and the eternality of faith. Tarkovsky envisions a place where apocalypse may be imminent, but a single candle flame could save the world. JULIET CLARK

Presented in conjunction with A Movement in Every Direction: Legacies of the Great Migration

INTRODUCTION Nadia Ellis

Nadia Ellis is an Associate Professor in the Department of English at UC Berkeley, specializing in Black diasporic, Caribbean, and postcolonial literatures and cultures.

On a summer day in 1902, the Peazant family prepares to leave their island home off the Georgia coast and leave a way of life to which there is no return. With authenticity in every detail—including the Gullah language, with its syntax and cadence retentive of West African influence—Julie Dash tells her story in the manner of a West African griot, “the way an old relative would retell it, not linear but always carried aloft by the surrounding natural beauty. . . . Relying on sounds and images to tell her story, and employing minimal dialogue, Jackson has created something breathtakingly quiet and ultimately transporting—a spiritual tribute to the moments, feelings, and connections that make a life” (Film at Lincoln Center).

THE 9 LIVES OF BARBARA DANE
MAUREEN GOSLING (US, 2023)

IN PERSON Maureen Gosling

“For decades Barbara Dane lent her stellar singing voice to social-justice movements in the Bay Area and beyond, garnering an impressive FBI file along the way. Deeply respected by fellow luminaries in folk, blues, and jazz, Dane built a far-reaching legacy with music, activism, and love. As Maureen Gosling’s celebratory portrait reveals, early solidarity with those suffering racial and economic injustice sparked Dane’s passion to use her talent to sustain marginalized people. . . . Bonnie Raitt, Jane Fonda, and other notables attest to Dane’s unique way of shaping and being shaped by tumultuous social revolutions from the 1950s on” (Carol Harada, MVFF).
